

Call for Papers

Political Discourse and Historical, Colonial and Neo-Colonial Regimes of Power

Thematic issues of "Language, Discourse, & Society", a journal published by Research Committee 25 "Language and Society" of the International Sociological Association, ISSN: 2239-4192, indexed in ERIH Plus.

Guest Editors: Gatitu Kiguru (Kenyatta University, Kenya) and Phyllis Mwangi (Kenyatta University, Kenya).

Foucault contends that 'power is everywhere', diffused and embodied in discourse, knowledge and 'regimes of truth' (Foucault, 1991). The view of power as a regime of truth acknowledges the fact that power is in a constant state of negotiation. A critical study of political discourse can reveal the discursive practices that shape the prevailing power structures, sustain and challenge them. Regimes of truth are discursively defined, reinforced and redefined and the avenue for this is social institutions (education, religion, law, media, political, economic, etc.). These discursive practices shape society and the power asymmetries in it. The traditional view of power is almost always negative. However, it is important to remember that power need not always be negative. It is true that power 'excludes'; it 'represses'; it 'censors'; it 'abstracts'; it 'masks'; it 'conceals'. However, it is also true that power produces: it produces reality; it produces domains of objects and rituals of truth (Foucault 1991). The fluidity of power allows the powerless to stage resistance.

9

This thematic issue of Language, Discourse, & Society welcomes both theoretical and empirical articles that focus on how political discourses in historical, colonial and neo-colonial contexts replicate and reinforce dominant regimes of power. It also welcomes contributions that show how the macro-structures of power are discursively challenged and even reengineered through discourse in micro-relations that are the capillaries of normal everyday practices (Välikangas and Seeck, 2011). The thematic issue specifically encourages contributions rooted in the sociology of language, sociolinguistics, but also which take an interdisciplinary approach to the call topic and thus employ the methods of critical linguistic enquiry to economic, political and sociological problems.

While the guest editors are notably influenced by Foucault's views on power as well as the views and methods of Critical Discourse Analysis, contributions that use other approaches are highly welcome.

Submissions can be done in English, Spanish and French.

Please follow the author guidelines indicated at the following URL, which includes a template for formatting: <http://www.language-and-society.org/language-discourse-society/instructions/>

IMPORTANT DATES

- December 2018: call for abstracts
- 31st January 2019: submission of abstracts
- 31st March 2019: Feedback on abstracts

- 31st May 2019: Submission of full articles
- 31st August 2019: Feedback from reviewers
- 30st October 2019: submission of revised articles
- This thematic issue will be published in December 2019.

SUBMISSION TO BE DONE ONLINE AT: <http://www.language-and-society.org/language-discourse-society/submit-paper/>

The contact email of the guest-editors for any query is: ldspowerissue19@gmail.com

References

- Foucault, M. (1991). Discipline and punish: the birth of a prison. London: Penguin.
- Hoffman, M. (2013). Foucault and power: The confluence of political engagement on theories of power. London: Bloomsbury Publishing
- Rabinow, P. (ed.) (1991). The Foucault Reader: An introduction to Foucault's thought. London: Penguin.
- Välikangas, A., & Seeck, H. (2011). "Exploring the Foucauldian interpretation of power and subject in organisation." Journal of Management and Organisation, 17 (6): 812-827